Synopsis

AlterNativas: Building possible futures is a documentary about transition initiatives and ecosocial regeneration; a collective project to make visible transformative experiences of our geography and inspire other possible futures.

Alternatives, from the Latin Alter (other) and Nativus (born), refers to the search for new realities, new origins. That is the starting point of this documentary project: to show innovative socio-ecological transition initiatives, diverse experiences that are proposing responses to the systemic crisis that we are suffering in the world: energetic, economic, ecological, social, cultural and epistemic.

The feature film tries to respond, with a purposeful approach and possibility, to questions such as: How can we face the current environmental situation and adapt to a changing reality? What individual and collective alternatives are already being implemented in different places to transition towards resilient communities and more sustainable models of life? What new stories and experiences can mark the future of our neighbourhoods, towns and cities? o How can we take the first steps to create an economy that promotes social justice and harmony with the planet and with each other?
